

We are building a pack with the Samsung INR18650R Energus Modules and wanted to know about the heating of the cells as we do not have a very comprehensive cooling system designed. We just have fans which make sure that the air flows through the cells. Simulations are showing temperature of 45 degrees, but that's a very crude estimation.

This could be pulled off by measuring the voltage as usual, and measuring the temperature with balancing activated, as the sensor in Energus battery modules needs a pullup anyway. This shouldn't be an issue because quality 18650s are very much stable and balancing current can be quite low (5-10mA is enough for a healthy pack).

For a much easier to build design I would look at energus modules and teardowns of Tesla Model S/3 packs for inspiration. Injection molded parts can be easily replaced with machined plastic parts. Would recommend spot welding if you are doing the cell connections DIY, or laser/wirebond if you have a sponsor.

Svelte is a radical new approach to building user interfaces. Whereas traditional frameworks like React and Vue do the bulk of their work in the browser, Svelte shifts that work into a compile step that happens when you build your app.

For any teams that use energus lithium ion battery modules for their accumulator: how have you added the internal cell fuse protection to the ESF's datasheet section? My submission has been rejected due to not using that fuse for the "Parallel Cell Fusing" cells in the accumulator section. The only information I know for certain is that each ...

From reading other team's papers and posts on the sub, it seems a lot of teams use Energus cells with an Orion BMS. For example this paper from Wisconsin Racing shows that they use Energus cells with an Orion BMS, and make their own "custom thermal expansion module" to read the temperatures and pass that data to the BMS over CAN.
